BACKGROUND

Diplomatic activities extend beyond negotiating at meetings, attending sessions, and signing agreements. Diplomats, government officials, and business leaders represent their state, company or organisation through their behaviour even beyond working hours. For this reason, this programme primarily aims at providing foreign service staff with the knowledge and skills that are necessary for them to effectively represent their country outside of direct job-related functions. Furthermore, it may be useful for more experienced diplomats and business leaders who are interested in improving their intercultural hospitality and formal etiquette skills taught by specialists in culture & society, food and culture, and dining etiquette.

The service-oriented 'new diplomat' can communicate with a wide range of state and non-state actors; is open-minded, flexible, and demonstrates natural authority by creating an atmosphere of comfort and trust. Hospitality skills lie at the centre of this approach.

This programme goes beyond traditional training of direct profession-related skills while at the same time addressing aspects of the diplomat's activities, such as attending formal dinners, offering, presenting, and receiving gifts under different cultural requirements, appreciating cultural and religious etiquette during social events, and hosting important guests

EVENT OBJECTIVES

The programme's overall objective is to provide foreign service officials and business leaders with the necessary knowledge base and confidence that will permit them to attend and host formal and informal social events in an intercultural setting by:

- Enhancing their understanding of formal etiquette around the table;
- Allowing them to anticipate and adhere to cultural and religious hospitality and other customs;
- Teaching them how to contribute to the ambience of a social event by correctly presenting and describing various foods and beverages.

By enhancing beneficiaries' knowledge base and skillset in hosting and attending formal social events, UNITAR will provide diplomats with the opportunity to practice what is known as "Charismatic Leadership" in leadership theory (Weber, 1922; House, 1976; House & Howell, 1992), namely a set of behaviours which are increasingly relevant in the relationship-oriented diplomatic and business communities.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

By the end of the programme, participants will be able to:

- Identify and adapt to the main differences between table etiquette in different cultures;
- Avoid the main universal and culture-specific faux-pas for various hospitality settings;
- Apply objective tools and models to decipher foreign cultures with greater ease;
- Appreciate the various attributes of wine and wine-food pairing;
- Utilise the acquired knowledge to experience more confidence at international social events.

METHODOLOGY

The programme orients around social events and relationship-building and will include interactive simulation exercises, group work, discussions and quizzes in order to enhance participants' application of the key social skills taught in the programme.

Modules 1-3 will be offered through a series of six interactive e-workshops, hosted by renowned International Hospitality experts and practitioners.

TARGETED AUDIENCE

This course targets any diplomatic officials and business leaders who are directly involved in international activities and who wish to enhance their ability to demonstrate natural charismatic leadership by reinforcing their relationship-building and hospitality skills. Previous editions have shown that this course is highly popular with the protocol and etiquette community as well as VIP guest managers and event organisers.

The course will equally benefit anyone interested in intercultural communication from a practical perspective.
